A man in all white walked up to a Miami-Dade fire truck over the weekend and smashed the windshield with a metal bat, video posted on "Only in Dade," shows.

On Monday, Ray Jadallah, Miami-Dade Fire Rescue assistant fire chief, confirmed the incident and said the truck "sustained damage."

"The individual started making some remarks," Jadallah said. "At some point he struck the windshield of the fire truck. ... We are fortunate that these incidents, even though Miami-Dade Fire Rescue responds to well over 250,000 calls a year, was an isolated incident."

The bat beating happened Sunday at the intersection of Southwest Eighth Street and Le Jeune Road, according to Miami Herald news partner CBS4. The video shows the man walking to the front of the truck, which was stopped at a red light on Southwest Eighth Street, heading east. After taking a swing at the windshield, the man drops the bat.

Arrested was 30-year-old Jesus Santana Jardines, the station reported.

Jardines faces charges including resisting without violence and criminal mischief, court records show. He was being held in Miami-Dade's Turner Guilford Knight Correctional Center.

There was $4,000 in damage to the truck, according to CBS4.

No one was injured in the incident, Miami-Dade Fire Rescue said.

Mount Sinai doctor accused of forging letters from Jackson staff to get fellowship

BY DAVID J. NEAL
dneal@miamiherald.com

When applying for a Jackson Memorial Hospital fellowship, a doctor working at Miami Beach's Mount Sinai Medical Center provided forged letters of recommendation from Jackson staff members, the Florida Department of Health said.

That's in the administrative complaint the department filed in May against Dr. Samer Obid's license. The complaint starts the sometimes ponderous disciplinary process.

An email from the Miami Herald to the address on Obid's online Department of Health license profile wasn't returned.

Obid got his license in April 2019, his online license profile says.

According to the complaint, he did his residency in internal medicine at the University of Miami Jackson Memorial Hospital in 2019, then took a position as a hospitalist at Mount Sinai in Miami Beach.

Last June 23 or 24, Obid tried to get placed in Jackson's Gastroenterology Fellowship program. In the process, the complaint says, he created fake Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC) accounts for Jackson faculty and submitted the forged letters from those accounts to the AAMC's Electronic Residency Application System.
