People in 14 states have been sickened by a salmonella outbreak connected to a charcuterie sampler that went to Sam's Club distributors in eight states, but actual retail locations in 26 states, including Florida.

That's according to the CDC and the USDA's Food Safety Inspection Service, both of which released updates on the situation on Friday.

The CDC says it knows of 24 people who have been sickened, five of them were hospitalized.

"The true number of sick people in this outbreak is likely much higher than the number reported, and the outbreak may not be limited to the states with known illnesses," the CDC said. "This is because many people recover without medical care and are not tested for salmonella."

The CDC pointed to 18-ounce Busseto Foods Charcuterie Sampler with Prosciutto, Sweet Sopressata, and Dry Coppa as the probable source of the salmonella outbreak.

WHAT IS SALMONELLA?

Diarrhea, stomachaches and fever usually start anywhere from six hours to a week after eating food infected with salmonella. The hard numbers on how many people get sickened in an outbreak are hard to determine because, after four days to a week, most people are fine.

But bloody diarrhea and more harsh forms of salmonella symptoms can send people to the hospital.

These usually are people over the age of 65, under the age of 5 and/or people with damaged immune systems. In only 0.03% of cases, less than one tenth of 1%, is salmonella deadly.
